About the author: Mira Pollack Sadker (1943-1995) for the first time most documenting gender biases in American schools. She was a professor of education and dean of the American University School of Education. She died while being treated for breast cancer in 1995. With her writings and lectures, Sadker warned Americans about the academic, physical, psychological and career costs of sexism. She wrote the first book for teachers on the issue of sexism in More than twenty years later, in 1994, she co-authored the first popular book on the subject: Failing at Fairness: How America's Schools Cheat Girls. Between these two publications, Myra Sadker brought her case to ensure fairness in education to a national audience. Along with her husband David, Mira Sadker has spoken in more than forty states and abroad, giving hundreds of presentations and seminars to teachers and parents concerned about the negative impact of sexist behavior. She has written numerous articles on how to educate and teach children free from the debilitating effects of sexism. On her behalf, Mira Sadker Advocates was created to continue its efforts and create a fairer and more efficient school. You are invited to learn more about Mira's contribution and the work of Myra Sadker's lawyers, including Sadker's World Day on March 5, by visiting a website created on her behalf: www.sadker.org. Karen R. Sittleman came to the American University as a graduate student, worked with Dr. Sadker on gender equality studies, then began to study teacher education, and has now completed this text. Karen brings energy and ideas to this tutorial. Karen studied at the University of Wisconsin for a bachelor's degree, and American University for her master's and doctorate. She teaches at the American University School of Education, and has been a virtual teacher for several courses offered online under the Women's Equality Act. Her articles on gender, Title IX and Teacher Education are published in the Journal of Teacher Education, Educational Leadership, Phi Delta Kappan, Principal and other professional journals. She is the author of Learning and Gender Equality: Funds, Skills, Techniques and Strategies (publishers Lawrence Erlbaum) and has created several equity websites. Karen is also the author of Making Public Schools Great for Every Girl and Boy, a teaching guide to promoting justice in math and science (National Education Association), and educational film guides for the hero for Daisy and Apple Pie: Raising Champions. She is a project manager for Myra Sadker Lawyers. Karen's research interests focused on equality in education, the basics of education, teacher training and spirituality in education. David Sadker has taught in high and high school as well as at the college level, and has been a professor at the University of Wisconsin-Parkside and American University (Washington, D.C.) for more than three decades. He and his late wife, Mira Sadker, gained a national reputation for researching and publishing on the impact of sex in schools. (To learn more about the life and work of the world, visit www.sadker.org). Dr. Sadker holds degrees from CCNY, Harvard University and the University of Massachusetts. He wrote books and numerous articles in both professional and popular magazines. He is the co-author of Failure in Justice: How Our Schools Deceive Girls (Touchstone Press in 1995), a year his research has been reported in hundreds of newspapers and magazines, including USA Today, USA Weekend, Parade Magazine, Business Week, The Washington Post, The London Times, The New York Times, Time and Newsweek. He has appeared on local and national television and radio shows such as The Today Show, Good Morning America, The Oprah Winfrey Show, Phil Donahue's Human Animal, National Public Radio all reviewed and talked about the nation, and twice on Dateline: NBC with Jane Pauley. The Sadkers received the American Educational Research Association Award for Best Review Research published in the United States (1991), their Professional Service Award in 1995, and their WillysTine Goodsell Award in 2004. The Sadkers were awarded the Eleanor Roosevelt Award by the American Association of University Women in 1995 and the Gender Architect Award of the American Association of Colleges of Education in 2001. David Sadker received two honorary doctorates. This name may belong to another edition of this name. The quote: Sadker, D.M., Sittleman, C.R. (2013). Teachers, schools and society (10th place).
